Biography

Dr. Ngoma Evelyn Moghalu (Dr. M.) is a wife, mother, researcher, teacher, social scientist, speaker, published author, and avid advocate for women, and Autism awareness/acceptance. Dr. M.'s advocacy is informed by her personal experiences as a woman, and mother to her handsome son with Autism. She has a Bachelor's degree in political science, and a Masters' degree in Mass Media Communication Studies from Howard University, Washington, D.C. She obtained her Doctorate degree in Sociology from Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas. When Dr. M. is not advocating education and Autism awareness, she occupies her spare time with her interests in mass media communication adventures. She enjoys public speaking and creating content for films, radio, podcast, and social media. Her appreciation for the arts takes her to places where she explores new experiences in acting, singing, voiceover, dancing and fashion. Dr. M. enjoys meeting new people who share her passion for the arts, and the rewarding adventures of life.

Engagement, Development
& Faculty Affairs, University of Houston, USA

Dear Dr Moghalu,

We want to sincerely thank you for your outstanding presentation at the 12th Making Diversity Interventions Count Annual Conference (#MDICAC2023). It was fascinating to listen to your stimulating and insightful thoughts. Indeed, your session enriched the conference in so many ways and our participants thoroughly enjoyed it.

We want to use this opportunity to apologise profusely for the technical issues experienced during the parallel sessions. Despite the technical glitches, it is a great honour that you could deliver your paper. We owe you our profound gratitude for your efforts.

This is the beginning of a positive relationship between you and the Centre for Inclusion and Diversity (CfID) and we hope to maintain it into the future.

Once again, thank you very much for your contributions.

Kind regards

Udy
